

About the orientation of project and the class

As my last log of the month, I want to talk about my project and how it makes me feel. This is the first time in the career when I feel that I am actually going somewhere, with the user experience and the user oriented design. All my career was oriented to only program and do not thing a lot about the user and its needs and goals. So this project and this subject help me a lot about understand more the process of prototype and create artefacts based on real information with the users.

My project is an app for the elderly, it is interesting how an application could challenge depending on the kind of main user that you had. With this information you start to challenge you opinion on why some applications are done in that way, the psychology of the color, the user friendly design, etc.
